AMERICANS TO CO-OPERATE IN LEAGUE NATIONS

Five Prominent Citizens Now Associated With Varying Forms of Work

GENEVA, Sept. 7.—While the United States government has consistently refrained from identifying itself directly with the league of nations, it has not held itself from having its citizens cooperate in some of the league's activities. Five prominent Americans are now associated with varying forms of the league's work.

One of these is Prof. John H. Russell, who is a member of the recently created permanent court of international justice. Another is Dr. George Elmer Hale, director of the famous observatory at Mount Wilson, who has joined the committee of intellectual cooperation. A third well known American is Dr. Rupert Blue, assistant surgeon general of the United States, who is heading its valuable skill and experience in public health matters to the league's health committee.

Two other American executives in the league are women—Mrs. Hampton Wright, one of the most valuable members of the league's opium commission, and Dr. Josephine Baker of the international health committee. Finally on the various technical and clerical staffs of the secretariat of the league there are many Americans, men and women, whose services are found extremely valuable. In an effort further to enlist America's interest and support in the league, an invitation has been sent to the Washington government to appoint a representative in the league's commission for the suppression of the white slave traffic.

Sir Eric Drummond, secretary general of the league of nations, is hopeful that it will be possible for the league to work out a policy whereby the United States, properly can cooperate in an increasing share of the league's activities without impairing to her own traditional policy of detachment from European affairs.
